The ability to consistently and reliably source cotton could be affected by certain external factors. For instance, cotton production relies on water, which can be adversely affected by climate change impacts. Human rights concerns at the farm level could also affect cotton availability. Manmade cellulose such as viscose pose risks of including wood pulp from ancient and endangered forests, negatively affecting air and water quality as well as biodiversity. |

| Raw Materials Sourcing | Description of environmental and social risks associated with sourcing priority raw materials                            | CG-AA-440a.1 | To address these potential risks, we source responsible cellulose from companies like Lenzing and Birla that are rated by Canopy for their avoidance of materials sourced from ancient and endangered forests and in any manner that could be harmful to indigenous communities. We also adopted the Changing Markets Roadmap, which defines key principles and guidelines for responsible viscose manufacturing. We were recognized in 2020 by the Changing Markets Foundation as one of 14 frontrunners—and one of only two based in the U.S.—due to our commitment to source sustainable wood-based fibers. And we have begun using hemp, which requires less water to grow, to replace some of the cotton in our products. Read more about potential risks in the LS&amp;Co. Form 10-K |
